AdvertisementQ: Regex to match a field of strings in a line I am trying to match a field of strings in a line, so I want to pick "Static IP Address" by default and then user can add to it. So I tried using ".*Static IP Address.*" and it works properly. But how should I go about picking just the "Static IP Address"? A: String regex = "[^ ]+Static IP Address[^ ]+"; Use.* (any character zero or more time) followed by Static IP Address (one or more time), followed by a literal character. See It has long been a goal of scientists and engineers to construct a multi-stage cryogenic refrigeration system. A multi-stage system typically improves the performance of cryogenic refrigerators by increasing the volume of space that can be cooled over that that of the cryogenic refrigerator, by decreasing the load on the compressor and/or blower, by increasing the efficiency of the refrigeration, or some combination thereof. One type of multi-stage system that has been attempted to increase the volume of space that can be cooled is a two stage system as shown in FIG. 1. In a two stage system, a first stage operating at approximately 100K is used to cool a region of volume 1 and a second stage operating at about 4K is used to cool a region of volume 2. However, the two-stage system does not have the capacity to cool a region of volume 1 and a region of volume 2 simultaneously. For example, if there is a load applied to volume 1, then the second stage is prevented from cooling volume 2. In some multi-stage systems, multiple stages are used to provide a continuous path of cool air. For example, a first stage operating at approximately 100K is used to cool a region of volume 1, and a second stage operating at approximately 4K is used to cool a region of volume 2. A third stage operating at approximately 20K can then be used to cool region of volume 2. The third stage in the three-stage system is designated as a bypass stage, because it is not used to cool any region of volume 1. The use of a bypass stage in a multi-stage system does not improve the performance of the cryogenic refrigeration system because the bypass stage only

While the latest version of Photoshop may seem daunting to the new user, it is easy to learn for the experienced user. For indispensable reporting on the coronavirus crisis, the election, and more, subscribe to the Mother Jones Daily newsletter. In a new article on Medium, a software engineer and privacy advocate has uncovered a slew of previously unknown problems with Google's AMP (Accelerated Mobile Page) system. The controversial feature, which was announced back in September, combines certain pages from sources like Gmail into its own format and renders them faster on mobile. It also hides a whole bunch of tracking code that will help guide future advertising across Google's properties. The new discovery includes a bug in the system that can be exploited by advertisers to track users across the internet. Even worse, it also shows the previous claims by Google about its privacy measures to be suspicious at best. As last year, Google's head of privacy policy, Nick Perry, claimed the company takes "extra steps to make sure that ads are not associated with personal information." However, in this case, it seems that personal data is leaking from AMP. "In our exploratory testing, we have demonstrated that if you do things to AMP you can trick Google into associating personal information (like your Android device's phone number) with ads." None of this should be a surprise. The system requires users to give Google access to their browsing history, contacts, and location, raising many ethical questions about the breadth of the information that could be harvested. But since the launch of AMP, there have been no official disclosures about how it really works, or even if it's really a standalone product, as some other companies have. Instead, a lot of the information has come from the developer and security communities, which have pointed out some of the flaws. The ongoing issues with the system have centered on Google's insistence that it can collect and share the personal data that users give it. Google's previous privacy statement for AMP provided a list of the data that was being collected and then promised that it would not be shared. Now, with this new discovery, it seems that neither of these claims are true. "We expect it is not only possible, but likely that Google will do many new things with this data that they haven't mentioned to us," Gadi Evron, a web security researcher and engineer, told Mother Jones. "It is likely that the only way to protect this data is to completely stop using

William M. Browne William Michael Browne (born May 15, 1927) was a member of the United States House of Representatives from Connecticut's 3rd congressional district, which includes Fairfield County. Browne was a prominent member of the Democratic Party and a prominent supporter of President Lyndon Johnson. Early life William Browne was born on May 15, 1927, in Cleveland, Ohio, to Joseph and Ida (O'Connor) Browne. He grew up on a farm and attended local parochial schools. He received his bachelor's degree from the University of Notre Dame in 1948 and his law degree from the University of Notre Dame School of Law in 1951. He married the former Josephine Frain on July 15, 1951, and they had three children. Career Browne began his career as a law clerk in the office of a Connecticut Supreme Court justice in 1952 and then clerked for a federal judge in New York City until 1956. He was attorney for the Connecticut Lottery Corporation from 1956 to 1958 and then an assistant counsel for the Connecticut State Department of Labor from 1958 to 1961. Browne was elected to the Connecticut House of Representatives in 1962 and to the Connecticut Senate in 1964. He was the sponsor of a bill that established the National Sports Hall of Fame and Museum in South Bend, Indiana, in 1964. In 1965, he was appointed as the U.S. Attorney for Connecticut; this position became vacant when President Johnson nominated John C. Lawn Jr. to be a federal judge. Prior to his election to Congress, Browne worked for Democratic presidential candidate Lyndon B. Johnson. It is said that Johnson chose Browne to be U.S. Attorney on the advice of California Democratic Senator Thomas Kuchel. Though there has been speculation that Browne was Johnson's choice to be U.S. Attorney, there is no documentation supporting this speculation. The office of the U.S. Attorney is also not traditionally an elected position. In an interview, Browne told Neil Sullivan of the Fairfield County Democratic Party that Senator Kuchel's advice to Johnson was "no different than the advice that Senator Dodd [D-CT] had given him" regarding Lyndon Johnson's position on the Vietnam War. Browne was elected as a Democrat to the 89th Congress and to the nine succeeding Congresses. He served from January 3, 1965, until January 3, 1977. He was not a candidate for renomination in 1976 to the 97
