This is done via the following languages: AutoLISP (for AutoCAD 2018 and earlier), Visual LISP (for AutoCAD 2010 and earlier), VBA, and .NET. VBA and .NET are part of Windows operating system and they are also present in many business applications. VBA and .NET support ActiveX controls, controls that are created using Microsoft Visual Studio. AutoCAD 2010 and earlier have built-in tools to assist with scripting. Visual LISP (VLISP) add-on applications are AutoCAD add-on applications that are run inside AutoCAD but add functionality to Visual LISP. DXF Add-on applications add functionality to an existing DXF file. Python add-on applications are AutoCAD add-on applications that are run inside AutoCAD. They can also be considered a language-independent programming tool that allows users to write their own AutoCAD extension applications. They are an alternative to VLISP add-on applications. AutoLISP add-on applications are AutoCAD add-on applications that are run inside AutoCAD and add functionality to AutoLISP. They can be considered to be a combination of a Visual LISP application and AutoLISP application. AutoCAD add-on applications that are written in Visual Basic are Visual LISP applications that are run inside AutoCAD and add functionality to Visual Basic. They can also be considered to be a combination of a Visual LISP application and Visual Basic application.
