Poly(vinylidene fluoride) (PVDF) nanocomposites reinforced with 0.5 wt % multi-wall carbon nanotubes (MWCNTs) have been prepared by mechanical mixing and sonication in toluene. A comparative study of the thermal and mechanical properties of the nanocomposite and neat PVDF samples has been carried out, where three strategies have been applied to enhance the thermo-mechanical properties of PVDF nanocomposites. The first strategy was the addition of organo-silanes, which resulted in a reduction of the π - π stacking distance between the adjacent -CF(2)- groups. This can be attributed to the hydrophobicity of the silane groups, which allows increasing the intermolecular interlayer distance in the PVDF matrix. The second strategy was the replacement of the binary solvent toluene with a ternary solvent mixture of toluene, 1-methyl-2-pyrrolidinone and water, which eliminated the strong aggregation of MWCNTs. The third strategy was the addition of the H(3)PO(4) salt, which resulted in the formation of nanoscale PVDF particles. The thermal and mechanical properties of the PVDF nanocomposites were studied by differential scanning calorimetry (DSC), thermal gravimetry (TG) and dynamic mechanical analysis (DMA). The results of DSC, TG and e79caf774b
